ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

The Comptroller of the Currency has the honor to present herewith to the Congress of the United States his Annual Report for the calendar year 1950.

The year witnessed a resumption of the inflationary trend which prevailed during the postwar years 1946, 1947, and 1948. As pointed out in our Report covering 1949, the trend was arrested during that year, and there was basis for the hope that the national economy was regaining stability of the type which yields benefits to all segments of our economic life.

Unfortunately, international events of the year 1950, and the perhaps inevitable reaction of business and individuals to those events, profoundly disturbed that stability. Certain forces making for inflationary maladjustments again became dominant, despite earnest efforts to prevent, and later to arrest, their development.

These events naturally were reflected in the condition of our country's 4,965 national banks, which at the end of the year had total resources of more than $$ 97$ billion-slightly over half of the total banking resources of the United States. The aggregate loans of the national banking system rose over $$ 5$ billion to a total of $$ 29.3$ billion, an increase of 23 percent. At the beginning of the year national banks' holdings of United States Government securities exceeded their total outstanding loans by $$ 14.4$ billion; by December 30 the difference was only $$ 6.4$ billion. The relative importance of loans, as compared with security investments, was greater, with respect to both volume and income, than it had been since prior to our entry into World War II. The $$ 2.6$ billion reduction in Federal Government bond holdings was offset in part by acquisition of an additional $$ 1$ billion of obligations of States and their subdivisions, and the remainder (supplemented by shifts of other assets) was balanced by an increase of $$ 2.8$ billion in cash and balances with banks.

Demand deposits increased $$ 6$ billion during the year, primarily as a result of the $$ 5$ billion increase in loans, previously mentioned. As might have been expected, time deposits did not rise significantly, ending the year at $$ 20$ billion, in contrast to a demand deposit total of almost $$ 70$ billion.

The expanded loan volume reflected the high levels of purchases of all types, from raw materials to household goods. Loans to business enterprises rose $$ 3$ billion to a total of $$ 13.4$ billion. Loans secured by residential real estate increased from $$ 4.6$ to $$ 5.5$ billion. Consumer loans increased $$ 1.2$ billion, reaching a total of $$ 5.7$ billion at the end of the year. Loans to farmers directly guaranteed by the Commodity Credit Corporation fell from almost $$ 600$ million to less than $$ 200$ million, while other loans to farmers rose from $$ 1$ billion to $$ 1.2$ billion.

At the end of 1950, national banks' investment accounts constituted 44 percent ( $$ 42.8$ billion) of their total resources. The character of security investments was generally sound from the standpoints of both credit quality and maturity position. Over 83 percent ( $$ 35.7$ billion) were Federal Government obligations, of which almost $$ 27$ billion had maturities of less than 5 years (a substantial portion of this maturing within 1 year), and only $$ 3.3$ billion had more than 10 years to run. Holdings of short-term Federal Government issues were well distributed among banks of all size groups.

The previously mentioned shift from obligations of the Federal Government to obligations of State and local governmental units was occasioned in part by the prospect of more severe taxation. State and municipal issues became more attractive by reason of their largely tax-free status. In addition, it must be borne in mind that borrowing of new money by States and their political subdivisions was of record proportions during 1950, amounting to $$ 3.4$ billion, and banks naturally felt a responsibility and desire to assist in financing local government issues.

The fixed assets of national banks, in the vast majority of instances, are carried at or below unrecovered values for income tax purposes, with many millions of dollars of depreciation anticipated. This conservative position is reflected in the fact that the aggregate investment of national banks in fixed assets of every description amounts to $$ 700$ million (book value as distinguished from actual realizable value), which is only 11 percent of their total capitalization.

Unremitting attention has been given to adequate and sound capitalization of national banks, especially in view of the increased hazards necessarily involved in a greatly increased loan volume during an inflationary period. While a few bankers (with executive experience limited in many cases to the past 15 years) argue that the character of their lending and general management policies provides a sufficient substitute for increased capital, the vast majority agree with our principle that there is no acceptable substitute for the protection afforded both depositors and shareholders by an adequate capital structure. A number of banks voluntarily increased capital through sale of new stock, and the general response of the managements and shareholders of national banks to recommendations that additional capital be provided to accommodate their increased volume of business has been gratifying.

Despite a decrease of 16 in the number of national banks, the capital structure of the system increased almost $$ 400$ million during 1950 , reaching $$ 6.3$ billion at the end of the year. In addition, reserves for bad debts were increased by $$ 77$ million to a total of $$ 388$ million.

Over $$ 300$ million of the capital-structure growth came from retained earnings. In addition, 102 smaller banks (deposits less than $$ 25$ million) added $$ 10$ million to capital funds through the sale of additional stock; 21 middle-sized banks (deposits between $$ 25$ million and $$ 100$ million) issued additional stock for $$ 8$ million; and 10 larger banks (deposits over $$ 100$ million) sold new stock for a yield of $$ 92$ million.

Banks are finding that the manpower requirements of the armed services, plus those resulting from the expanding activities of industry and commerce, are tending to syphon off bank employees. Even more serious, in some situations, is the fact that too many small banks are managed solely by aging officers, with no adequate replacement personnel in their organizations. In such cases, upon the death or retirement of key personnel, the directors are unable to find, or consider they cannot afford, competent management from outside sources. As a result, an increasing number of such banks are being absorbed by others. In certain areas, particularly where Statewide branch banking is permitted, this is causing a steady reduction in the number of small unit banks and ever-greater concentration of banking resources under the control of relatively few large institutions. Everyone interested in local banks, and particularly bank directors, would do well to place greater emphasis on measures designed to correct this weakness, knowing that a bank without adequate management has only two possible destinations-absorption or failure.

In the domestic economy of the United States, undoubtedly the most significant fact of the year 1950-particularly the second halfwas the inflationary trend at an accelerating tempo. The subject of inflation-its causes, course, prevention, curbing, and effects-has been discussed in millions of words within the last year. Every aspect of the problem has been extensively studied, and the results of that study have been presented to all levels of political and economic activity. Nevertheless, our realization of the basic importance of this matter should never become dulled, despite frequent reiteration. It is not too much to say that, in addition to being grossly and arbitrarily unfair to large segments of the population, inflation weakens the spirit of energy and initiative which is responsible for our nation's economic preeminence. It discourages planning and saving by individuals and businesses. Despite its temporary hectic stimulation, it introduces an element of uncertainty which undermines the sound foundations of efficiency and an expanding future.

There appears to have been much misunderstanding regarding the causes of the recent inflationary rise, and a failure to grasp the relative force of various factors and their interrelationship. When effective demand for goods and services increases, there is almost certain to be an increase in price levels unless the supply of goods and services can be increased at a rate sufficiently rapid to satisfy the expanded demand. In 1950, this was not the case. We had relatively little idle productive equipment; we were already using some raw materials as fast as they could be produced; and the pool of available additional manpower was comparatively small. In these circumstances, prices were certain to rise as people had more money to spend and were willing to spend it.

What were the means by which the increased demand was made effective? There has been a tendency to oversimplify this problem by attributing the inflationary movement largely to the $$ 8.5$ billion expansion in bank loans during the latter half of the year. For some reason, it has been customary to overlook the fact that effective dollar demand is made up of two factors-not only the absolute volume of money (credit as well as currency) available, but also the velocity of the turnover of that money.

The outbreak of the Korean conflict, and various crises since that event, stimulated waves of buying in excess of immediate needs, because individuals and business concerns anticipated both higher prices and shortages of desired materials and products. As a result, money which had been idle became active, and money generally passed from hand to hand, from account to account, more rapidly. This utilization of idle funds and more rapid turnover would have exerted an upward pressure on the price structure even in the absence of any increase in the quantity of money in bank accounts, tills and pockets.

In fact, however, the volume of available money also increased. As indicated previously, there was a substantial increase in bank credit during the second half of 1950 , and some portion of this undoubtedly made its contribution to the inflationary advance.

A relatively small part of bank credit expansion during 1950 reflected the financing of defense-engendered conversion or construction of plants and equipment. A certain portion of the expansion undeniably was due to the widespread impulse, already mentioned, to increase business inventories beyond normal volume and to buy consumers' goods in advance of actual need. The origin of this impulse was the fear of higher prices and the possibility that restrictions on civilian production might create shortages of raw materials and finished products. This was evidenced, in the field of banking, by the abnormal volume of loans to manufacturers, distributors, and retailers for the purpose of building up inventories of raw material and finished goods.

However, it should be emphasized that, as a result of higher price levels, a large part of the increase in commercial bank credit was due to the need of regular customers for abnormal credit to carry normal inventories. It would be unreasonable to expect a bank to place a 1949 ceiling on its customer's 1950 borrowings, thereby forcing him either to curtail normal operations or to seek another source of credit for his legitimate and uninflated needs.

The foregoing discussion is intended to present bank credit expansion in its correct perspective as one factor-although by no means the sole or even chief factor-contributing to the rise in price levels during 1950. By providing a part of the means for premature and excessive purchases, in an economy already pressing against its productive-capacity ceiling, some lending by banks was adding to the pressure in the inflationary engine.

It is noteworthy that the growth in loan volume occurred among national banks of all sizes, but was somewhat more pronounced among the very largest city banks, probably because the greatest credit demands during the year came from major industrial and commercial concerns, which dealt primarily with the larger banks, capable of furnishing credit in the required volume. Thus, of the 4,965 banks in the national banking system, the 126 banks with deposits in excess of $$ 100,000,000$ held 63 percent of the total loan volume, but originated 70 percent of the loan increase during 1950 ( $$ 3.8$ billion out of $$ 5.4$ billion total). At the other extreme, the 4,535 national banks with deposits of less than $$ 25,000,000$, which hold 23 percent of total loans, were responsible for only 14 percent of the loan increase in 1950.

Without doubt, many banks spontaneously exercised restrictive lending policies in an effort to do their share toward maintaining a stable economy, regardless of the excesses of others. The situation, however, called for a more concerted and cooperative effort.

Starting in July, steps were taken to stem the tide of credit expansion growing out of and aiding inflated economic activities. Certain restrictions on mortgage financing guaranteed or insured by the Federal Housing Administration or Veterans' Administration were placed into effect, in that month, in order to conserve building materials needed for national defense. In September Federal Reserve Regulation "W" again became effective, thereby restricting installment credit. In October an additional curb was applied, through Federal Reserve Regulation "X," upon credit for new residential real estate. However, despite the relatively severe character of Regulation " X ," a high volume of new mortgage activity continued through the late months of the year.

In August the Federal and State bank supervisory authorities issued a "Defense Loan Policy" statement and requested banks and other financial institutions to decline to make loans that might be used for speculative purposes or otherwise interfere with defense requirements.

Also in August the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System increased the discount rate from $1 \frac{1}{2}$ to $1 \frac{3 / 4}{}$ percent. However, the direct effect of this step was necessarily limited, because-despite greatly increased loan accounts-banks were borrowing very moderately from the Federal Reserve System and correspondent banks. The total of such indebtedness of national banks at the end of the year was less than $\$ 80$ million.

In the nature of things the various steps taken during the last six months of 1950 to check the expansion of credit could have comparatively little immediate effect. Joined with that of other essential anti-inflationary measures, however, they provided the groundwork for further efforts in 1951, which are becoming increasingly effective as this Report is written.

In any economy undergoing a substantial degree of inflation and loan expansion, credit hazards are definitely increased. During periods of expanding activity and rising prices, almost everyone's credit appears to be good, at least on a short-term basis. It is to be hoped that fewer bankers have lost sight of this basic principle during the past year than have done so in our earlier inflationary experiences. Nevertheless, when the international situation becomes more settled, more than a few borrowers, and their banks, may be confronted with definite loan repayment problems.

Despite such hazards, which are perhaps unavoidable in a freeenterprise system, it is believed that the national banking system of the United States, at the midpoint of the twentieth century, is adequately equipped-in its sense of public responsibility as well as in numbers, personnel, organization, and resources-to discharge creditably its vital functions in our dynamic economy.

A comparison of the assets and liabilities of the banks in the Na tional Banking System as of December 31, 1949, April 24, June 30, October 4, and December 30, 1950, reported pursuant to calls for condition statements by the Comptroller of the Currency, is shown in the following table.

Notes

Act of Feb. 25, 1863, provided for reports of condition on the first of each quarter, before commencement of business.
Act of June 3, 1864-First Monday of January, April, July, and October, before commencement of business, on form prescribed by Comptroller (in addition to reports on first Tuesday of each month showing condition at commencement of business in respect to certain items; i. e., loans, specie, deposits, and circulation).

Act of Mar. 3, 1869, not less than 5 reports per year, on form prescribed by Comptroller, at close of business on any past date by him specified.
Act of Dec. 28, 1922, minimum number of calls reduced from 5 to 3 per year.
Act of Feb. 25, 1927, authorized a vice president or an assistant cashier designated by the board of directors to verify reports of condition in absence of president and cashier.

Act of June 16, 1933, requires each national bank to furnish and publish not less than 3 reports each year of affiliates other than member banks, as of dates identical with those for which the Comptroller shall during such year require reports of condition of the bank. The report of each affiliate shall contain such information as in the judgment of the Comptroller shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between the affiliate and the bank and to enable the Comptroller to inform himself as to the effect of such relations upon the affairs of the bank.

Sec. 21 (a) of the Banking Act of 1933 provided, in part, that after June 16, 1934, it would be unlawful for any private bank not under State supervision to continue the transaction of business unless it submitted to periodic examination by the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal Reserve bank of the district, and made and published periodic reports of condition the same as required of national banks under section 5211, U. S. R. S. Sec. 21 (a) of the Banking Act of 1933, however, was amended by section 303 of the Banking Act of 1935, approved Aug. 23, 1935, under the provisions of which private banks are no longer required to submit to examination by the Comptroller or Federal Reserve bank, nor are they required to make to the Comptroller and publish periodic reports of condition. (Five calls for reports of condition of private banks were made by the Comptroller, the first one for June 30, 1934, and the last one for June 29, 1935.)
